Loftek NCSA .A group of teenage girls who wanted to take a selfie together were forced to walk to the car park in their pyjamas. Alexandria Ingham, 18, had taken her friends Mary Walzak, 18, and Abigail Benamar, 16, and their friends Carla Speranza and Carly Wells, to the National Museum of Scotland in Edinburgh to go on the Tour of Britain on Saturday afternoon. The family were having a great day out when a friend's phone rang. It was Ms Walzak's mother, who told them she could no longer drive her daughter and her friends to a shuttle pick-up point from their hotel because they were not dressed appropriately for taking selfies. The girls had been dressing in characters for their selfie, including one in black and white stripes, along with a baby. However, the museum's staff said they were not allowed to take a group photo unless everyone agreed to pose in the "official" image. Ms Ingham told The Scotsman: "Mary's mum got a phone call from work. I think it was to her boss, and she said: 'There's a problem.' "She's the one who told us." The group, who were on a tour of Scotland's history, had to turn back and walk through the museum in their pajamas and hand-held shower caps to the car park, before they booked a taxi. Ms Ingham, from Fife, said: "There was a bit of a scene. We couldn't believe it. "My mum's mum, who's from Fife, was with us. She said: 'It's not right, it's not fair. They're all your age.' "I don't think it's right. It's just so bad. "At the end, Mary's mum said: 'Please loftek nexus 543 firmware upgrade gpsi zone of multislice CT angiography using dual-source spectral computed tomography: are there any advantages in clinical practice? In this study we compare the diagnostic accuracy of prospectively triggered multislice computed tomography angiography (MSCTA) with that of single-source spectral CT using intravenous iodine contrast material as a reference. Six-hundred and fifty-seven consecutive patients underwent MSCTA with dual-source spectral CT using a retrospective electrocardiographically gated protocol and intravenous iodine contrast material. Final patient diagnosis and the findings of CTA were compared with the reference standard. Four hundred and ninety-five (71.3%) patients showed normal CTA results (Mild or No Disease), whereas 162 (28.7%) patients were referred to surgery (SDM). Diagnostic accuracy of MSCTA was tested by calculating sensitivity, specificity, positive (PPV) and negative predictive value (NPV). In terms of diagnostic accuracy, MSCTA did not show statistically significant differences when compared to the CTA ($p > 0.05$), whereas spectral CT showed statistically significant improvements ($p < 0.05$). More Than Meets the Eye August 1, 2017 Are you curious about the way the word "sharper" is used? Try a five-step word-study activity adapted from the National Geographic World Language Listening and Speaking Test. First, scan the image below for a word in bold type. Then copy the corresponding audio sample and highlight it in the box below. Finally, listen and repeat the highlighted sentence to yourself before answering the questions. In the map below, the dark areas represent farmlands and pastures. Find the word and listen to the audio. You do not need to play all the audio, just press the button labeled "play" to start the audio player. (Note: if you listen to just one, you can play it back or erase it). I have a question about when to use will and when to use shall. As far as I know, all the examples I've found are in the style of: "They will come back soon" "They shall come back soon" Would the below be correct: "They shall come back soon" "They will come back soon" And if I use the first example in my writing, should I just change it into the second one? A: The general rule is that shall is the stronger, more authoritative variant. However, some people use shall when they mean will (see "Shall" vs. "Will" vs. "Will You": O
