The lipid composition of human erythrocyte membranes was investigated during aging. 2. Phosphatidylcholine (PC), phosphatidylethanolamine (PE), and phosphatidylserine (PS) increased during aging, while phosphatidylinositol (PI), lysoPE and lysoPS decreased. 3. Glucosyldiglycerides and diacylglycerols were also subject to aging-dependent changes. 4. The total PE and PC content showed considerable variations during the erythrocyte lifespan in the presence of glucose and non-glucose sugars. 5. In certain cases the aging-dependent alterations of the lipid composition of human erythrocyte membranes were accompanied by alterations of the protein and glycoprotein components of the membrane. 6. These results show that the chemical composition of human erythrocyte membrane lipids is subject to slow and continuous changes.Q: How to change Spark cluster driver memory I am trying to change the memory of the driver node in a Spark cluster with nodes of a specific memory.
